

mouse sports

Newsletter "G7 to take on prize money issues" - 01.05.2007

The continuing development of eSports has also led to a boost of prize money at tournaments. However, winning a tournament doesn't always mean to instantly receive cash, in the end it often turns out to be a grueling struggle with tournament administrators: Mostly, prize money is paid out months after the tournament has taken place, or there aren't even payments at all. This problem will now be tackled by the group of the G7 teams, who are going to put pressure on tournament administrators with a united voice in order to help teams and players receiving their prize.

An insurance for a fast and warranted payment of prize money will not only help all affected teams and players, but also eSports as a whole. For that matter, the G7 offers Teams/Players to send an e-mail to them (prizemoney@g7teams.com), to instantly get in contact with the operators of tournaments and solve problems.